LANGUAGE SKILLS

Maya works as a user-experience designer at a mid-size fintech company in London. She usually starts her day from home, checking emails while sipping coffee, but she's expected to be at the office by 10 a.m. for the daily stand-up. Most of her projects involve working on mobile-banking apps, and she often collaborates with developers in real time using Slack and Figma.

Today she's leading a sprint review for a new feature that lets customers apply for loans directly through the app. The meeting is being held in a conference room on the third floor, and a few stakeholders are joining via Zoom from different time zones. After the review, Maya will head to the design studio to iterate on the wireframes based on the feedback she just received.

Later in the afternoon, she has a client call with a bank in Zurich. They're discussing the branding guidelines for the upcoming campaign, and Maya is explaining how the color palette will be applied across all digital touchpoints. The call ends at 4 p.m., and Maya spends the last hour on preparing her presentation for the executive board, which will take place tomorrow at 9 a.m.
